Collecting Ideas for Better Results

In February, Blue Class engaged in children-directed activities by collecting their interests and ideas. The children shared various thoughts and opinions, including toy stores, insects, letters, the 'Head and Shoulders' song, Buzz Lightyear, and more. One child, in particular, proposed the idea of a 'Toy Store Day' and re-counted her experiences at a toy store to friends. The children of Blue Class then recreated the event, hosting a dance party with animal toys, taking photos with toy cameras, creating Sprinkle Popsicle crafts, and playing with Coco Melon Baby characters.

Discovering Treasures: Then Museum Adventure

The Blue Room went on a field trip to the Royal Saskatchewan Museum. During their visit, the kids participated in a scavenger hunt, exploring different sections to find moose, wolves, Earth exhibits, indigenous attire, and a giant T-rex. They placed stickers on corresponding pictures after each discovery. This game activity sparked the children's interest in museums and motivated them to explore in a more proactive manner.

Explore Modern Art

In March, preschoolers will explore contemporary art pieces, drawing inspiration and ideas to create their own diverse artworks. Additionally, they plan to visit the McKenzie Art Gallery to observe how art projects communicate with people.
